General Assembly in New York on 23 September, 2003. Several issues of international concern were discussed by the three countries, including the situation in Iraq. There was no 'joint strategy' between the three on this issue. However, the approaches of India, Russia and China with regard to the Iraq issue were broadly similar. The three countries were of the view that what was needed was a political rather than military solution to the crisis. They agreed on the need to restore sovereignty to the Iraqi people and the right of the Iraqi people to determine their political future. The three sides also expressed the belief that the U.N. should have a central role in the political and reconstruction process.
